Dear Chairman Gallagher:

I am in receipt of the Official Organization Chart, which displays photos of the Postal Service executive staff, and I am deeply troubled by the noticeable lack of diversity. Although the nation has made significant progress toward equality, it appears that the USPS remains mired in the Dark Ages.

It is inexcusable that women and people of color have been relegated to such a small role in the managerial structure, especially considering the fact that the workforce at-large is so much more reflective of the population.

I would expect more from the institution to which I have committed 51 years of service. Applying any reasonable standard of inclusion, one has every reason to expect that the United States Postal Service should and must do better.

Sincerely,

William Burrus
President
